Often the cross is seen merely as a synonym for the sacrificial and substitutionary work of Christ. Yet the scriptures show it to be very much more. Another emphasis of the cross in the New Testament is that it is a symbol of man's total rejection of God's Christ. Man gave Him a cross; God gave Him the highest place far above all heavens, the name that is above every name, and the promise of the throne of the universe. The Jews wanted to have Christ degraded by crucifixion in order to destroy forever any thought of worth, and ensure that He would never become an object of faith and worship. The disciples of our Lord, in obedience to His teaching, immediately took the cross as the badge of discipleship. He had been rejected and nailed to a cross and it would now be the emblem of their identification with Him in that rejection and reproach.
