A leading feature of spiritual revival has been the tenderhearted affection present in remembering the Lord Jesus Christ in His death. After a number of months of preaching the gospel to Indians in the Ecuadorian jungle, missionary Jim Elliot had seen a small band of believers gather together as a New Testament church. As they began to grow in grace and spiritual maturity, the desire to remember the Lord in His death began to burn in their hearts. Jim Elliot wrote in his journal on January 16, 1955, "With a small nucleus of baptized believers we began having a simple meeting for the breaking of bread, where Christ was exalted and worshiped. The room where we met had bamboo walls and floors, thatched roof, backless benches. A small table stood in the center of our circle with a loaf of bread and a cup of wine. The Indians gathered quietly, and sat barefooted and reverent around the symbols which spoke to them of the death of their Lord Jesus, whom they had so recently come to know and love. One by one the young men would take part, suggesting a hymn, or praying, while all joined in lifting their hearts to Christ. Reminded of His death, they also thought of His coming again, and frequently ended the meeting singing 'Be happy, believers--Christ is coming!'"
